

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE.

THE utility of Directories in facilitating the intercourse of Society is undeniable, but much of that utility must necessarily be dependent upon the extent and accuracy of the information they afford. In obtaining materials for the following pages, no expense or personal labour has been spared by the Compiler. His object has been the formation of a well-arranged survey of the whole Population of the County of Derby, according to station, profession, occupation and residence. Such an elaborate task may appear at first too extensive to be accomplished by one individual, but the general and continued personal acquaintance which the Compiler had maintained, during a considerable period, throughout the county, enabled him to execute, with precision, in his own person, a labour which, in the hands of strangers, would be liable to become a mere accumulation of errors. That he has been aided, in this great undertaking, by numerous friends and other local residents, he acknowledges with gratitude, while his own intimate knowledge of almost every part of the county, enabled him justly to estimate the accuracy of such valuable information.

The public has already been respectfully apprized that this Directory is intended to form a portion of an extensive work comprehending a General History of Derbyshire; and that it is printed in a uniform manner for the purpose of its being bound up (should such be the inclination of the subscriber or purchaser) with that portion of the work now in progress. But many reasons have induced the Proprietor to resort to this mode of issuing the Directory to the public, while means are still in agitation and action to render the History (as well of the present State as of the Antiquities and Families of the County) complete and accurate.—The geography, geology, natural history, agriculture, manufactures and commerce of Derbyshire have been surveyed in the forthcoming portion of the Work; and the Proprietor flatters himself that he has obtained a large quantity of highly useful information on all these important subjects. In what may be termed the Second Part of that portion of the Work still in preparation, will be embodied the antiquities of the County, its general political and parochial history, with genealogies of the nobility and gentry and biographies of many celebrated natives and inhabitants.

Those two portions, still in the press, are, as the public will perceive, distinct from the Directory, although the Directory may be esteemed a useful and important adjunct to them. In fact, the Directory is, in itself, a survey of the population in its existing state, and therefore the natural and appropriate termination of the antiquarian and general history. Even on the shelves of the antiquarian it might find preservation at least, for there are few students of antiquity who would not estimate such a Directory as they have now an opportunity of preserving for posterity as a valuable document (could such a document have descended to them from former times) in their hands.

In order to render this Directory serviceable to the higher ranks as well as to the trading part of the community, the Compiler has included in his Work names which are seldom found in publications of this nature, and which would certainly be misplaced in the Directory of a single town or district, purely commercial or manufacturing. But this is the Directory of a County, and that County, Derbyshire, which comprises every diversity of rank and station.

Under these considerations, the Work commences with a list of the Nobility, Gentry and Clergy of the County, according to the alphabetical order of the names of their residences. This mode was recommended as being not only useful to the traveller in a geographic point of view, but as enabling the Compiler to enumerate more names than any other, without reference to the professions of the law and physic, which are not so decided with respect to the locality of their professions.

Secondly, Under an alphabetical arrangement of the towns, villages and hamlets, will be found the names of the inhabitants, also alphabetically placed, each preceded by the name or title of the Lord of the Manor or principal owner of land. These lists comprehend the names of the gentry, including the clergy, lawyers and physicians of each place, the names and designations of magistrates, manufacturers, commercial men, tradesmen, householders, &c.

Thirdly, Attached to each town will be found information respecting the land and water carriage, the Mails and post coaches, and all the necessary statements relative to the post-office regulations.

INTRODUCTION.

IN prefacing the DIRECTORY of a County, it will not be expected that we should enter into any very extensive survey of the county itself, its history or productions. That task will be found executed with all the information in our possession, in the work of which the DIRECTORY forms a distinct and yet connected portion. Still, as we are desirous of giving to that portion all the interest and utility of which its nature may be thought capable, we are induced to prefix to it a short sketch, comprising first an enumeration, with a few useful remarks, of the natural productions and curiosities of Derbyshire. Secondly, a few particulars concerning some of the most remarkable seats of the nobility and gentry. Thirdly, a succinct but general and (it is hoped) useful view of the trade and manufactures of the county, combining numerous notices of the present commercial condition of Derby and Derbyshire.—Under the two first of these heads, we shall endeavour rather to abridge the matter already before the public in numerous Guide books, than to add any unnoticed particulars; but in the third, it will be our study to compress into a few pages a variety of important circumstances, which have been communicated to us by intelligent gentlemen connected with business. These, in whatever form they may be given, will not be without their value.

Derbyshire, one of the central counties of England, is so diversified in geographical aspect, that it may be said to possess both high-lands and low-lands. The former are distinguished by their romantic scenery, their rocks and caverns, and for their mineral wealth: the latter differ little either in their appearance or in their produce from the fruitful districts of other British counties. In each of these, the labours of industry are eminently known, and it would be difficult to say whether the mountains or the plains of the county are the wealthiest, or which owes the most either to the bounties of nature or the energies of art.

The mountainous region of the High Peak, together with the rapid streams, embanked by rude and abrupt cliffs, and forming valleys of different extent and features, which meet in the Lower Peak and swell the waters of the Derwent, offer much to the contemplator of nature, to the painter and to the geologist. This region is visited by many as abundant in astonishing natural objects, and by others as an ample field for scientific research.—To all, the chasms or cavities in the limestone rocks, with their stalactites, spars and other incrustations are objects of peculiar interest, while the dales offer gratifications of a more general character.

The most remarkable eminences or mountains are on the north-western extremity of the county; and of these the highest are the northern Axe-Edge, the middle and the southern Axe-Edge, Kinder-Scout, and Blakelow-Stones. According to the trigonometrical survey, the great northern elevation of Axe-Edge is 1751 feet above the level of the sea, and Holme Moss, the most conspicuous point of Kinder-Scout, is 1859 feet.

The ridges which branch out from the north-western corner of Derbyshire, in various directions across the High Peak and the Eastern Moor, until they are lost in the fruitful plains that embank the Trent, contain the head-springs of numerous rapid streams or rivulets and romantic rivers.

The rivers of Derbyshire are, the Trent, the Derwent, the Dove, the Erewash, the Mease, the Amber, the Bootle, the Wye, the Bradford and Lathkil, the Ecclesbourne, the Goyte, the Etherow, the Ashop, the Noe, the Rother, the Hipper, the Henmore, and other smaller streams. Of these, the Derwent may be regarded as the chief with respect to the county, as it collects and discharges into the Trent the waters of nearly three hundred thousand acres. From its source on the Alpine ridges of the Peak, until it reaches the town of Derby, its banks are varied with beautiful and interesting scenery. The Dove has been the theme of poets, the study of painters and the resort of scientific naturalists. The Wye has its interesting channel amidst ravines and precipitous rocks, and displays within the course of a few miles, an astonishing diversity of abrupt scenery, interspersed with woods or sometimes tranquilized by pastoral prospects and the hand of cultivation.

Besides the sources or heads of rivers, there are many mineral or medicinal springs.—At Buxton there are hot springs, the temperature of which is constantly 82 de-greens. This water is used for bathing, and taken internally. There are also chalybeate springs at the same town, the temperature of which varies from 52 to 55 degrees; and on the opposite sides of the dislocated limestone, west of Buxton, there are cold springs and a bath. In the midst of this dislocation the interesting river Wye has its source.—Matlock is known as well by its bold and beautiful scenery as by its hot baths. The temperature of the springs is 68 degrees. They rise in that extensive disruption of the chain of limestone rocks, which the geological writers have termed the great Derbyshire Fault.—At Matlock town there is a chalybeate-spring.—At Kedleston park, east of the elegant mansion of Lord Scarsdale, there is a medicinal spring, sulphureous and salt. Its temperature is 47 degrees. This water resembles that at Harrogate, but is much weaker.—In all the mountainous ridges, springs are discovered variously impregnated, with salt, sulphur or with mineral combinations. There are also springs, which being replete with calcareous particles appear to petrify pieces of wood or other substances immersed for any time in their waters.

The caverns or chasms in the lower limestone rock are among the peculiar features of Derbyshire. The most remarkable are Peak-Hole or the Devil's Cave at Castleton. It has a wide entrance, with a concreted roof, and in rainy seasons a stream of accumulated waters vents itself through this chasm.—Pool's Hole is about half a mile south-west of Buxton.—Elden Hole is a very deep open hole in the limestone rock, north of a village called Peak-Forest town.—Merlin's Cave, south of Eyam Church, is small but very rich in beautiful concretions or stalactites. Bagshaw's Cavern, which, on account of the superior elegance of its stalactites, is generally called the Crystallised Cavern, is situated south-west of Bradwell, and extends through numerous subterranean chambers, above four hundred yards. The caverns at Matlock bath are numerous: they are called the Rulland, the Cumberland, the Fluor, the Devonshire, &c. and are wonderfully diversified in position and extent as well as in the grotesque forms of the concretions and their awful subterranean scenery. Reynard's Cavern and Hall are situated in Dove Dale, near Hanson-Grange. The latter is entered by a curious natural arch or portico.—There are other caves, some of them abounding with crystals and stalactites of smaller dimensions in various parts of the Peak: but it is doubtful whether some that have obtained the name of caverns are natural chasms or exhausted and neglected mines.

Of the dales or valleys, Dove Dale is undoubtedly the most celebrated. It extends nearly north-west of Thorpe, between Derbyshire and Staffordshire, about five miles along the course of the Dove. The high and elevated rocks in this grand dale are called Dove Dale Church, Lover's Leap, Pickering's Sugar Loaves, Tissington Spires, Thorpe Cloud, &c.—Bonsal Dale extends two miles west from Cromford. The geologist may trace in it the four limestone strata, with three of the intervening beds of toadstone. This dale is deep and romantic. The turnpike road to Buxton passes through it. Monsal Dale is particularly interesting. It embanks both sides of the Wye during the most romantic and meandering part of its course, extending from Fin-Copt Hill to Miller's Dale.—Matlock-Bath Dale extends along the course of the Derwent more than two miles from Cromford cotton mills: Within it are found the tufa and the petrifying springs, the hot springs and baths. The principal eminences are called the Heights of Abraham, High Tor, Scarthern Cliffs, Wild Cat, Tor-Rocks, &c.—Middleton or Eyam Dale is highly romantic and picturesque: it abounds with elevated rocks and some interesting caverns. The other interesting dales are Cave Dale near Castleton, Bradford and Lathkil Dales, Mill Dale near Buxton, and Miller's Dale on the banks of the Wye, in which rises the Raven Tor and Chee Tor, while other bold and abrupt eminences project along its sides.

The mineral productions of Derbyshire embrace nearly every species of subterranean wealth; but the coal, lead, iron and marble are those which chiefly engage the enterprise and industry of the inhabitants. The coal-field or great coal-rake as it is sometimes called, lies along the eastern boundary of the county, and is from twelve to fifteen miles in width, with narrow branches extending from it along the border of Leicestershire, southward, and more particularly near the border of Yorkshire, where the field or rake itself widens and occupies a large district of that northern county.—The strata of coal are sometimes completely denudated or very barely covered with earth, but they are usually found beneath the yellow or magnesian limestone. The whole extent of the coal-measures or the coal field in Derbyshire is about 190,000 acres.

The principal collieries are Adelphi, Alfreton, Ashgate in Brampton, Butterley, Codnor park, Denby, Ilkeston, Morley park, Newhall, Pinxton, Ripley, Hartshay in Penrich, Staveley, Shipley, Somercotes, Swanwick, West Hallam, &c. &c.

The use of coal as fuel must have been known in very early times, and rude tools have been found in some parts of Leicestershire and Yorkshire, where the coal strata basset or appear above the limestone, which sufficiently prove that the Britons were not unacquainted with this valuable article. There is evidence also of the Barwell colliery, near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and some mines in the West Riding of Yorkshire, having been worked by the Romans. Coal, as fuel, was however not extensively used in England until the commencement of the seventeenth century. In the reigns of Edward I. and Elizabeth edicts were made prohibiting coal-fires in London. Still it appears, from a charter of Edward II. dated 1315, that the coal of Derbyshire was in use in the monasteries, and that the monks of Beauchief supplied themselves from the mines at Alfreton and Norton. Coal-mines are now justly esteemed the most valuable source of our national wealth, as it is from their abundance that our manufactories have derived that astonishing power of production; for the steam-engine would be an inert machine were it not for the almost vital heat which our inexhaustible supply of coal imparts to it.

In Derbyshire the coal-pits, except in a few instances, are worked by lessees. The rents are from £50. to £180. per acre, and measurement of the mines and their works is generally made every year. Some coal-owners take a rent upon every ton sold at the pit: this varies from 4d. to 16d. according to the goodness of the coal and the productiveness of the works. Coal, although it possesses many varieties, is commonly spoken of only as hard or soft. The hard coal, when of a bright black colour, is much esteemed. The soft coal often burns rapidly, and in some instances it is slattery or easily crumbled into slack or small fragments: it is then called smithy coal, and is used only for manufacturing purposes. Coal-mines are subject to fatal explosions of what is termed the fire-damp. This is a gas, chiefly composed of hydrogen, generated from the decomposition of various substances; and, mixing with the atmospheric air, it frequently explodes, occasioning much desolation and loss of lives. The choke-damp is the deadened or unbreathable air, that expands after the explosion by which the oxygen has been consumed.

This district of Britain was more or less known to the nations of antiquity on account of its lead mines, the produce of which was an article of commerce in the marts of Tyre and Carthage. Subsequently, under the government of the Romans, this useful mineral was an object of research and regulation; and blocks or pigs of lead have been discovered in this county, stamped severally with the name of the reigning emperor, and in one instance with the name of an individual, probably that of a government supervisor. There are proofs that the lead-mines were not overlooked by the monks, when, during the Saxon heptarchy, they laid the foundations of their wealthy establishments. In 714, the lead-mines around Wirksworth belonged to an ecclesiastical establishment at Repton, and there appear to have been various grants regarding the mines during that period. Previous to the conquest, these grants had been seized by the Danish sovereigns, and William I. retained them as the peculiar domain of the crown. At the time of the Norman survey, as is apparent from Domesday-Book, the lead-mines were valuable. The castle of the Peak, built about that period, was covered with lead. From that period to the reign of Elizabeth, the right to these mineral treasures was esteemed to be vested in the sovereign, and this claim was confirmed by Inquisitions held at Ashbourn and Wirksworth. But queen Elizabeth, in the 16th year of her reign, granted all her mineral possessions in Derbyshire to a Society or Corporation. The Devonshire family have long been lessees of the High-Peak-mines, and the lease of those in the Wapentake of Wirksworth is vested in Richard Arkwright, esq.

The miners have from time immemorial possessed regulations or laws of their own. By these laws, or customs, any man or set of men might dig or search for veins of ore in the king's field (comprising the greater part of the mountainous limestone district of Derbyshire) without the permission and without being in any way accountable to the owners or occupiers of the soil, for the damage committed by them.

The first lead mines were made in places where the limestone is covered with light soil, and the ore was thrown out by hand instruments. Some shallow mines, opened, probably, in periods of the highest antiquity, still exist; and, indeed, it was not until a very modern era, that the veins of ore were followed to any considerable depth. The ancient mineral laws also were injurious to the progress of improvement. The rake-veins are now worked at very great depths. Each direction taken by the miners in working out the ore, is called a stoop of work, and in some mines, two or three stoops are wrought at the same time. The produce of ore even in the same rake-vein differs materially: in the extent of one yard, the quantity of ore may vary from 1600 to 300 pounds. The veins of ore called pipe-veins are generally worked under greater disadvantages than the rake-veins.

The Derbyshire lead mines are held in shares, and frequently the shares are small and the co-proprietors numerous. Some shares are forty-eighths, and even these in some mines are again subdivided into eighths and sixteenths.

We enumerate the following as a few of the principal lead mines.

Bondog-hole, sometimes called the Dogholes, in Middleton by Wirksworth, where ore is said to be found in the toadstone stratum. These mines are naturally cavernous and abound with stalactites. That they were worked in very ancient times is apparent from the large hillocks of refuse stuff in and about them.

The Gang or Dove-gang, the Godber, Goodluck and Great-pits in Cromford and Middleton, are rich in ore which is found in the shale, the limestone and even in the toadstone strata. Pyrites and other mineral productions abound in these mines, and a hot-spring oozes through the limestone rock.

The Gregory mine at Overton in Ashover abounds in ore, which is found in the grit, the shale, and limestone strata. The ore is of two different kinds. Here are also transparent fluor with silvery pyrites, crystals of calc, spar, &c. The principal shaft is three hundred yards deep.

The Cross-Rake mine in Matlock High Tor abounds in lead and calamine. It is in the limestone stratum.

The Odin mine, north-west of Castleton, is perhaps one of the most ancient in the county. It contains much lead ore, with black-jack, fluor, cauk, elastic bitumen, &c.

The Ratchwood mine, in Wirksworth, is productive of much valuable ore, with other minerals.

Stafford's-Dream, or the Dream-mine is wholly in the limestone rock, and is rich in lead-ore, ochre, &c.

The Cromford Moor and Crich mines are amongst the most valuable now wrought in the county.

There are about two thousand two hundred and eighty miners employed in getting ore in Derbyshire.

The cupolas for smelting lead are at Barbrook in Baslow, Bradwell, Meerbrook in Alderwasley, Lea near Cromford, Middleton Dale, Stone-Edge in Ashover, Totley, Via-Gellia, Bonsal and at Stoney Middleton.

The Messrs. Alsop, of Lea Wood, are the greatest smelters of lead ore in the county; they frequently smelt thirty tons per week. Messrs. Milnes, Ashover; Richard Hurt, esq. Wirksworth; John Barker, esq. Hilltop, Bakewell, &c. are also considerable smelters.

The lead mills of Messrs. Walker and Co. on the Normanton road, near Derby, merit attention; and the shot tower of Messrs. Cox, Poyser and Co. is a curious and interesting object. This is a circular building, about fifty yards in height. The formation of the shot is an ingenious process, for which the proprietors of the works have a patent. The ore, in a state of fusion, is poured from a boiler at the top of the tower, and falls through sieves into a reservoir of water below. This tower suffered considerably by fire about three years ago, but was shortly afterwards repaired, and is now in full operation.

At very early periods the ironstone of this county was known, and in various places coal-furnaces were erected for smelting it. The first mode of getting this mineral was by open casts or works, but when the bassets or exposed beds of ore were exhausted, recourse was had to excavations, which are frequently made in the form of a cone or bell, from three to ten feet deep, and spreading in its descent over many yards. When the ironstone bed is covered by a solid stratum, the ore is worked in the regular way of mining. The ironstone beds at Codnor Park near Heanor, those at Morley Park near Heage, and those at Somercotes in Alfreton, Chesterfield and Staveley are the most valuable in the county. The old coal furnaces continued in use until within the last fifty years, but iron is now made in tall furnaces only, heated with the coke of pit-coal, and blown by cylinder bellows worked by steam-engines. When the fusion of the ironstone commences, the smelted metal passes through layers of coke and limestone, and collecting at the bottom of the furnace, is let out into beds of sand, moulded to the forms required. A pig of iron is three feet and a half in length, and weighs one hundred pounds.

Before the introduction of coke for the smelting of iron, the number of blast-furnaces was four, and their aggregate produce was eight hundred tons of pig-iron annually.

In 1788, one charcoal blast-furnace only remained; and seven furnaces, in which coke was consumed, had been established. The total annual produce of pig-iron had risen to four thousand five hundred tons.

In 1796, the blast-furnaces were ten, and their annual produce had increased to seven thousand six hundred and fifty tons.

In 1806, the number of furnaces was eleven, and their estimated annual produce ten thousand tons.

In 1825, fourteen furnaces were in blast within this county, yielding about nineteen thousand one hundred tons of pig-iron.

In 1827, the number of blast-furnaces was fifteen, and their produce may be stated at twenty thousand eight hundred tons.

The number of blast-furnaces in work, has been recently reduced to fourteen, and the pig-iron manufactured from them, within the present year (1829) will probably not exceed twenty thousand tons.

The total number of blast-furnaces in Derbyshire is nineteen, five of which were out of blast in the beginning of 1829.

The celebrated Butterley Company possesses numerous and extensive works. At Butterley, there are furnaces, a foundery and steam-engine manufactory: at Codnor there are furnaces, a foundery and bar-iron works: at these places, together with the Ormonde, Portland and Heanor collieries; the ironstone mines connected therewith; the Crich limestone quarries and lime-works, and the Codnor Park lime-works, there are at present nearly fifteen hundred men employed. This number necessarily varies with the state of trade. Half are employed in the mines and the rest in the iron works and other manufactories. There are now (March, 1829) two furnaces in blast at Butterley and two at Codnor Park, producing on an average thirty-five tons of pig-iron per week at each furnace.—The wages paid to the different classes of men vary considerably. The following may be about the average. Ironstone-getters, 12s. to 14s. per week: colliers 15s. to 20s. In each of these two classes a great number of boys are employed, whose wages vary from 4s. to 12s. per week, according to their ages. Labourers 12s. per week: furnace men 17s. 6d. to 21s.: moulders 18s. to 21s.: smiths 18s. to 21s.: carpenters 16s. to 20s.: model-makers 18s. to 24s.: engine fitters, turners and other mechanics, about 16s. to 24s.: quarry men 12s. to 15s.

The massive and magnificent castings executed at Butterley have been numerous, and have bestowed a celebrity upon the enterprising and skilful proprietors, which, being shared by the county, renders the iron-works of Derbyshire the subject of admiration to distant nations. Among these works are the following:—The Vauxhall iron bridge: a cast-iron bridge to cross the river Gompta, at Lucknow, in the East Indies, for His Highness the Nabob of Oude: the iron roof for the Rum-quay, West India docks: bridges and other works for the West India docks: the cast-iron colonnade in front of the Opera House, London: the iron bridges for the harbour of Dublin, and iron roofs for the king's warehouses in that city: the iron bridge for Leith harbour: the iron bridges, lock-gates, and other works for the Caledonian canal: a considerable part of the cast-iron works for his majesty's dock-yard and storehouses at Sheerness.—During the war, iron shot was made at the Butterley works for the king's service. At the same manufactory was made the whole of the large main of pipes to supply the city of Edinburgh with water; as well as numerous pipes for the great water-work companies and gas companies in England, and those of the water-works at the Cape of Good Hope. Besides many steam engines for collieries, factories, mills, &c. several powerful ones were made at Butterley, for draining the fens at Misterton, near Gainsborough, by which the perfect drainage of more than 50,000 acres of land has been effected. The steam engines applied to vessels for the purposes of navigation which have been executed at these works are numerous. And a vast number of steam-engines, sugar-mills and machinery have been sent by the Butterley Company to the West Indies, the Mauritius and other colonial states. The Butterley Company employs twenty-six steam engines from one hundred and sixty to eight horses' power: the aggregate power amounting to more than that of seven hundred horses.

The Alfreton Iron Works are situated within the hamlet of Riddings, in the parish of Alfreton. They consist of two blast furnaces for the manufacture of pig-iron, and an extensive foundery for the conversion of a part of this produce into castings. During the late war, these works were employed almost exclusively in furnishing cannon-shot and shells for the service of government; of which three thousand one hundred tons have been sent to the royal arsenal at Woolwich in the space of one year. Similar castings continue to be occasionally supplied from these works for the board of ordnance, and for the East India Company. Now, however, the principal part of the produce of these works, not disposed of as pig-iron, is cast into retorts and pipes for gas works; pipes for water-works; castings for machinery; bridges and the general purposes of architecture. The retorts made at Alfreton have obtained considerable celebrity on account of their durability. Three collieries are connected with this establishment; which, besides supplying the iron works, contribute largely towards the general consumption of coal in the midland counties. Eleven steam-engines are in use on the different departments of the works, and from six to seven thousand yards of rail-road. The number of men employed is about five hundred. Three hundred and fifty of these are connected with the ironstone works and collieries, and the remainder with the blast furnaces and founderies. The earnings of the labourers vary from 1s. 8d. to 2s. 4d. per day; of the mechanics, founders and furnace men, from 3s. to 5s.; of the colliers and ironstone getters, from 2s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. according to the nature of the work and the ability and experience of the individual.

The limits of an introductory chapter will not allow us to describe more particularly these important establishments. Our intention in this outline is rather to enumerate the prominent objects of interest which this county contains, than to anticipate the researches of the intelligent enquirer. It will suffice therefore to mention, in this place, that the Brampton and Chesterfield founderies are more eminent for the useful and tasteful articles of domestic convenience, than for more ponderous castings, as are those at Derby, Dronfield, Millford and Renishaw. The foundery of Messrs. Weatherhead, Glover and Co. in Derby, has been distinguished not only for the elegance of the domestic castings, but for the superiority of its architectural works and ornamental vases. The gothic church-windows and columns executed at this foundery have been esteemed perfect specimens of this art, and are proofs of the capability of its being applied to the loftiest designs of the builder. The churches and chapels in which these elegant gothic window-frames, &c. have been affixed, are those of Portsea, in Hampshire; Bordesley, near Birmingham; Walsall, Burton and West Bromwich, in Staffordshire; Kidderminster, in Worcestershire; Ashton-under-Lyne and Oldham, in Lancashire; and the new church (St. John's) in Derby.

Besides the founderies already mentioned, there are in this county nine iron forges, where are made wrought iron bars, rods, sheet plates, &c.; and at Derby the iron and copper works of Messrs. Bingham, Humpston and Co. These mills were established in 1734, for preparing iron for various uses, and for the purpose of smelting, rolling and preparing copper for sheathing vessels, and sheet-iron and tin. There is also the wrought-iron steam engine boiler manufactory of Mr. Harrison, St. Mary's bridge, Derby; at this manufactory boilers are made from one to one hundred horses' power, steam kitchens, and every other description of wrought-iron boilers, brewing and bleaching pans, gasometers, hot-air stoves or cockles for heating mansions, &c. roasting and steaming apparatus, and every kind of lock and smith's work. Mr. Harrison is now engaged in making a wrought-iron tank, for the Nottingham gas company, forty-two feet in diameter and eighteen feet six inches deep, that will hold 193,082 gallons of water, and estimating the pressure on the bottom to be 8½ lbs. to the inch, the weight will be 910½ tons.—The tank is estimated to weigh thirty-six tons when complete, and it is undoubtedly the largest ever made in this county. Mr. Harrison also erects vineries, peach houses, pine-pits, conservatories, green-houses, &c. which he heats by steam or hot air.

The manufactory of Messrs. Fox and Son, City Road, Derby, on the banks of the Derwent, is highly interesting for the display of superior ingenuity in the command and application of power imparted to various engines. This is principally seen in cutting iron, and in his admirable iron lathes, which are from £200. to £300. value.

At Mosbrough, Troway, Ridgeway and Ford, in the parish of Eckington, and other villages in the north of Derbyshire, an extensive manufacture in scythes and sickles is carried on. From this neighbourhood various countries are supplied with these useful implements, viz.: America, Russia, Poland, Scotland, Ireland, &c. and all parts of England.

The nail manufacture has been a very ancient branch of the iron trade in this county. It is at present carried on extensively by Messrs. Mold and Co. at Belper; and by other masters at Belper, Chesterfield, Derby, Eckington, Wirksworth, and other places in the county; there are about sixty masters in this business, who employ not less than two hundred and fifty hands.

Of the natural wealth of this county the marble may be mentioned as one of the constituents. It is a beautiful calcareous substance, and is found in various parts of the High and Low Peak. The black marble of Ashford is capable of receiving an extraordinary high polish, so as to reflect objects as brightly as a mirror. The mottled and veined grey marble, varying in tint from a faint blue to an azure-purple, is obtained in large quantities near Monyash. The figured marble, abounding with shell-petrifactions (entrochi, anomites, corals, &c.) the sections of which display an endless diversity of figure, is found also at Monyash, Ashover, Hassop and at Slaley near Bonsal. There are marble works at Ashford and at Derby, where this material is wrought into articles of domestic elegance and into monuments. Chimney-pieces are sold at various prices, from 30s. to upwards of £60. and beautiful tables of black marble, enriched with elegant engravings, are also made there.—The saw-mills for cutting marble and free-stone into slabs were first established at Ashford, by the late Mr. Henry Watson, of Bakewell, nearly a century ago.

* In the limestone rocks is found the substance called, petrosilex or chert. This when white and pure is known by the name of china stone, and is sent off in very considerable quantities to the Staffordshire potteries. Most of the limestone and chalk districts produce this material, but that from the neighbourhood of Bakewell and Little Longsdon is most esteemed.

The freestone or building-stone quarries are very numerous in Derbyshire. At the Lea-wood delp or quarry, blocks of building-stone are sold at 6d. per foot cube; the price at Belper is 8d.; and at the Priory, near Breadsall, a fine solid stone is procured, wholly free from clay, that is sold as high as 10d.—Some of the gritstone rocks afford an excellent building-stone, and that from the yellow limestone strata is durable. The shale freestone is found variegated with concentric streaks, of an orange colour or dingy red, and chimney-pieces are sometimes made of it.—Flagbeds of paving stones, which split plane and flat, and require little labour are also numerous. The price at the quarry is from 12*d.* to 20*d.* per superficial yard. The most perfect are those in the gritstone rocks.

There are about twenty grindstone quarries. The stone differs considerably in its quality, but is all serviceable either for grinding fine tools or for coarser purposes. At Corbar near Buxton and Stanley, very fine grindstones are made, while the large coarse stones from the Gregory quarry in Overton, are in extensive demand. The average value is about two pounds or two guineas per ton. Some of these quarries furnish whetstones and scythestones; the latter at 10*s.* or 12*s.* per long hundred.

The gritstone rock, so abundant in the northern districts of Derbyshire, supply the farmer, the builder and the artisan with much useful material, and at Stanton in the Peak and at Birchover, the grit rock is found porous, and is in request for filtering cisterns and other vessels.

The quarries producing slate or tile-stones are numerous. The general price of the slate at the quarry is from 54*s.* to 70*s.* per rood; the rood being sufficient to roof in forty-four square yards. At Cobourn quarry, in South Winfield park, the slates are remarkably large and coarse, some of them are more than a yard high, and are used as eaves slating and even as fences.

The gypsum, alabaster or plaster-stone is, by the geologists, classed among the earths, and is no where found in greater purity than in the red marl strata of this county. There are four gypsum pits on the south-east side of Chellaston, belonging to Mr. Henry Orton and Mr. George Wooton. There is also a pit at Aston, and another at Ballington Hill near Ambaston. The principal demand for the pure white gypsum or that slightly streaked with red, is made by the Staffordshire potters. This sells at 10*s.* per ton; but some particularly fine blocks are purchased by the makers of alabaster ornaments and by statuaries, as high as 30*s.* and upwards per ton. The columns in the mansion of Lord Scarsdale, at Kedleston, are formed of this material. The inferior sort, of which plaster floors are made, is called flooring stone, and is sold at from 5*s.* to 7*s.* and 10*s.* per ton.

The caulk mills, for grinding and converting caulk into an article little inferior to white lead, have been successfully established at Bonsal and Derby. Caulk is found in lead mines throughout the county, and the price of it at the pits, in its raw state, is from 8*s.* to 12*s.* per ton.

The spar works of Mr. Hall at Derby, together with the museum at Matlock, are gratifying objects of curiosity, taste and science. The fluor spar, or as it is termed blue john, is an elegant natural production. The only mountain where it can be obtained in sufficient abundance and quality for the purposes of manufacture, is situated westward of Castleton, between Mam-Tor and the eminences that compose the Long Cliff. Its price is about £40. per ton. Some of the pieces of fluor are a foot in thickness, and have four or five different veins, but such large pieces are very rare. In general they are only about three or four inches in thickness. The deep violet is the most common kind, but in some pieces a fine yellow tint prevails, and in others a pale rose-colour. The acid obtained from fluor spar is more powerfully corrosive than any other, and is used in engraving upon glass. The natural colours of the spar are greatly affected by heat. At the spar-manufactories in Derby, this elegant material is worked into a variety of ornamental and useful articles, such as vases, cups, necklaces, ear-drops, &c. There are also similar manufactories at Buxton, Castleton and Matlock Bath. The coarse, discoloured and inferior kinds of this spar, are in great demand at the founderies as fluxes of the ore. From Knowles' mine great quantities are sent to the Ecton copper works; and the furnaces at Butterley and Somercotes are supplied from the Crich Cliff pits.

Bricks and tiles are made from the red marl, with which the more fruitful part of Derbyshire abounds; particularly from the tenacious portions of that earth. From the grey clay of Brassington, which is a decomposition of toadstone, tiles have been made, resembling the flat slate-like tiles of Staffordshire. Draining tiles and pipe-bricks are made at Newton Solney, where the former are sold at 20*s.* per hundred; and the latter at various prices, from 4*d.* each to 35*s.* the thousand. At Ashover, Bolsover, Swadlincote and other places, fire bricks are manufactured for sale and are in great repute; and at Swadlincote arch-bricks are made for reverberatory furnaces, and round tiles for the use of the bar-iron manufacturers.

The tobacco-pipe makers, who reside chiefly in Derby, Bolsover, and New Brampton near Chesterfield, obtain much of the raw material from Bolsover, Killamarsh, and Chellaston Hill.

The Derbyshire diamonds are small detached and perfect crystals, consisting of an hexagonal prism terminated by pyramids. They are found at Buxton, Castleton, Miller's-Dale near Priestcliff, &c. They are generally imbedded in toadstone strata, where sometimes have been found small specimens of calcedony, jasper, terra-vert and even onyxes.

The art of the lapidary or jeweller is said to have been introduced into this town by Mr. Obijah Mellor, about the middle of the last century, and yet there exist some uncertain traditions that assign to it a much higher antiquity; and it is not improbable that the stones found in the High Peak tempted the researches of lapidaries from very remote periods, until the real value of those stones were correctly ascertained. The present lapidaries and jewellers are Mr. F. Severne, Mr. E. Simpson and Mr. W. Moore. The articles manufactured by them are esteemed little inferior to the best workmanship of London. They employ about one hundred hands, and the wages are from 12s. to 22s. per week.

A district like Derbyshire, abounding thus in the useful ores of lead and iron, with other natural productions, would necessarily have had some intercourse of trade in very early times. It would be absurd to endeavour to trace any certain vestiges of such commerce, any further than to point out the probability that the mines of Derbyshire were known to the traders of Belgium previously to the Roman invasion, while the pigs of lead, impressed with latin inscriptions, which have been discovered in the mining districts, sufficiently prove that this species of wealth had become an object of attention to the Roman government.—The conveyance of heavy articles must have been attended with considerable difficulty, but it appears plainly by Domesday Book that the Trent had been navigable long before the Conquest, and it may be inferred that water carriage was not wholly unknown in the remotest periods.

There can be no doubt that those who wrought the mines obtained their sustenance from the southern districts of the county, and hence would originate a trade in corn and other provisions. This intercourse continued many centuries, and Camden describes the town of Derby in his time, as dependent for its prosperity upon dealers who purchased corn, which they sold again to the more northern people.—The business of malting was carried on in Derbyshire at a very ancient period. The art and trade of brewing seems also to have been understood at an early era, and as the word ale may be fairly derived from the Danish oel, it does not seem unlikely that some kind of beverage from fermented corn, was introduced into this county by that people, who for some time held possession of Derby. It cannot be affirmed that the malt-trade was carried on very extensively in this county before the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and we observe that Deering, in his History of Nottingham, mentions that town as having enjoyed the malting and malt-liquor trade for several ages without any competitor in the midland part of the realm. Mr. Woolley, however observes, in his manuscript history, under the date 1712, “the principal trade of this town (Derby) is that of malting, with which they supply a great part of Cheshire, Staffordshire and Lancashire, by which many good estates have been raised; as also by the trade of a baker, this town supplying most of the Peak country with bread of hard corn, they having none but oats amongst themselves. This town is famous for very good ale, which the brewers send to London and other parts to good advantage.”

The woollen manufactories were established at very early periods in this and the neighbouring county of Nottingham, as appears by a Charter granted by King John in the year 1199, which conferred on the burgesses of Derby and Nottingham the exclusive privilege of dying cloth. This rather proves the antiquity of the dyers' trade in these two towns, than of the manufactures. A proclamation was made in 17th Edward III, to carry into effect a previous resolution of parliament, expressly for the protection of the wool-trade of Derby, which ordains that no person whether native or foreigner shall purchase wool at a lower price than 9½ marks per sack, that being the price established in the county of Derby. This shows that the wool of this county was considered sufficiently important to take the lead in fixing the general price of that article, or that Derby had the reputation of being the staple town for the disposal of native wool. It is remarkable that about the period of this proclamation, the conquest of Calais, where a mart for the wool of Flanders had long existed, had introduced much foreign wool, and thus diminished the price of the home-grown commodity. Edward perceived the advantages of this intercourse, and notwithstanding this protecting edict, he incorporated a company of wool merchants, under the name of the merchants of the staple, and ordained that the price fixed by them at Calais should be the regulating value. This company maintained its station and extended the home and foreign wool trade with much advantage to the country, keeping up a continued correspondence with agents in Derby and Nottingham, until the loss of Calais, under Queen Mary, when that channel of prosperity to this town gradually declined.

Wool in Derbyshire is sold either by the stone of 14 lbs. or by the tod of 28 lbs. There are no fairs expressly for the sale of the wools of this county, though some persons have at times advocated such an establishment, and formerly the July fair at Chapel-en-le-Frith was noted for the sale of this article. It is customary for the wool-staplers to go from farm to farm. The wool of the woodland sheep has been sold by Mr. Charles Greaves of Rowlee, as high as 42s. per tod; and the wool of the small forest-breed, sells for half as much more as the new Leicestershire wool. Mr. W. B. Thomas of Chesterfield, interested himself, earnestly, in introducing the Merino breed into this county, on his farms at Boythorpe, Brampton and Baslow; and in 1810, his late Majesty honoured his patriotic endeavours, by presenting him with two fine Merino ewes.* In 1812, Mr. Thomas clipped three hundred and eighty-six fleeces, which sold for £340. 7s. (besides £22. 5s. 6d. for lambs' wool) averaging nearly 17s. 8d. for the wool of each sheep, through the whole flock.

By the charter of Grants of Queen Mary in 1556, there appears to have been three fulling-mills on the river Derwent, which stood on the flats, where the old silk mill was afterwards erected; and the name of the "Full-street" still points out the particular part of the banks of the river, where the fullers carried on their branch of the wool-manufacture. Fulling-mills are now in use at Glossop, Simond-ley and other places.

It is within the last century that the manufacture of woollen cloth has been practised in this county on an extensive scale, but there are at present, numerous establishments for the various processes of yarn-spinning, weaving and cloth-dressing; and in that part of Glossop-vale which borders upon Yorkshire, broad and narrow cloths are fabricated equal to those of any other district in England. This vale, romantically situated, contains the cloth-works of Chunal, Hayfield and Simond-ley. — Worsted-spinning for the hosiers is carried on at Litton, Lea-wood, Melbourn and Tideswell, and at St. Werburgh's in Derby there are mills for this operation. — Blanket and carpet weaving have been undertaken in this county, but we believe not with the success expected by the enterprising speculators. Fustians and stuffs are made at Ollerset in Glossop-dale, at Tideswell and at Woodthorpe.

There are manufactories of linen in Derbyshire, but the growth of flax has not been so successfully attended to, as in the opinion of many intelligent persons it might have been. The cultivation of this useful plant has, however, not been wholly neglected, and in the moist meadows amid the moor-lands of Scarsdale, that cultivation has been generally successful. There are flax spinning mills at Kelstedge, Toad-hole, Charlesworth, Matlock, &c. and the linen-thread or yarn is woven into sheeting, checks and similar fabrics at Belper, Kelstedge, New Brampton, Chesterfield, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Wirksworth, Creswell in Whitwell, &c.

Hemp is not cultivated in any part of this county. There are however numerous rope-walks and rope and twine mills. The entrance into the Peak Cavern at Castleton is celebrated for its rope and small cord makers, whose rude appearance and movements in the gloom of the terrific arch-way, are appropriate to the scene. At Clown, there is a manufactory for the weaving of sacking, sail-cloths, hop-bags and other coarse articles.

Stockings were in former times, generally, if not entirely made of worsted, and were knitted by hand; but for many years past, stockings intended for sale are frame-woven. In Derbyshire very few, if any, worsted stockings are made on the frame; and the framework-knitters of this county may be divided into two branches; namely, those who work in silk and those who use cotton only. In the silk branch there are eight hundred and fifty persons employed; in the cotton, not fewer than six thousand, five hundred. — The stocking-frame was invented towards the close of the sixteenth century, by Mr. William Lea, M. A. of St. John's, Cambridge. He was born at Woodborough, a village about seven miles from Nottingham. It is related that he became enamoured with a lovely stocking knitter, who instructed and employed young girls in the same business. She rejected his addresses, and her admirer, in revenge of his slighted affections, conceived the design of inventing a machine that should render the hand-knitting of stockings a profitless employment. He produced the stocking-frame in 1689, and taught his brother and some of his nearest relatives the use of it. Having for some years practised this new art, at Calverton, a village about five miles from Nottingham, he proceeded to London, and solicited the protection and encouragement of the court. This was either at the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth or early in that of James I.; but though he and his brother are said to have made a pair of stockings in the presence of the sovereign, his invention was discountenanced, upon the grounds that it would tend to deprive hundreds of the industrious poor of their usual means of maintenance. The value of such improvements, by which the productions of industry might be increased, was not then understood in this country, and France was the place where the aid of machinery in various species of manufacture was beginning to be sought after. There Mr. Lea, at the invitation of the illustrious Henry IV. went with nine workmen, and settled at Rouen in Normandy. The murder of that monarch, and the intestine troubles of the kingdom destroyed the expectations of Mr. Lea, who ended his days at Paris; a victim, it is said, to disappointment and grief. Seven of the workmen returned to England, and under the direction of a person named Aston, who had considerably improved upon the original invention, the foundation of the manufacture was laid in England.—The two workmen who remained in France attempted in vain to obtain encouragement; and endeavours were made with very little success to introduce the framework-knitting into Italy and Holland. The art, in the mean time, began to flourish in this country, and during the Protectorate, the framework-knitters petitioned Oliver Cromwell, to be incorporated by charter. In this petition, which is composed with much intelligence and spirit, they style themselves “the promoters and inventors of the art, and mystery or trade of framework-knitting, or making of silk stockings, or other work in a frame or engine.”—They wrought (as appears by the petition) generally, if not entirely in silk, that material being “the best and richest of all others in use and wearing, and most crediting the artisans, and of the greatest advantage unto this State and Commonwealth, yielding several payments to the use of the State before it passes out of the hands of the traders therein, and increasing merchandise by both the ways of importation and exportation of the self-same material, imported raw at cheap rates; exported ready wrought at the utmost extent of value: so that the distance of those valuations is totally clear gain to this Commonwealth, and esteemed upwards of six parts in seven of the whole quantity of this material in the highest value thereof, wrought up by this manufacture; which has vindicated that old proverbial aspersion:—the stranger buys of the Englishman the case of the fox for a groat, and sells him the tail again for a shilling.—And may now invent and retort upon them:—The Englishman buys silk of the stranger for twenty marks, and sells him the same again for one hundred pounds.”—Cromwell did not grant the prayer of their petition, but they obtained a charter from Charles II. soon after the Restoration, by which the exercise of their manufacture was restricted to a company, with a jurisdiction extending ten miles round London. In process of time, this company established commissioners in some county towns, where they compelled the country framework-knitters to purchase their freedom; but a spirited Nottingham artisan determined to try the question in a court of law. In this process, the company was cast, and the stocking manufacture has, since that occurrence, continued to be entirely open. Since the dissolution of the company, the manufacture of stockings gradually declined in London and spread itself into various parts of the country. At Leicester, in particular, it flourished greatly during the early part of the last century, but the finest work was made at Nottingham and Derby. Some framework-knitters established themselves in Towcester in Northamptonshire, and at Godalming in Surrey.

* "In order to excite attention to the progress and advantages of breeding Merino sheep, Mr. Thomas has invited the agriculturists of the county to be annually present at his sheep-shearing, when he exhibits the live animals in their several stages of growth, their wool, their mutton; and cloth also, both for ladies' and gentlemen's wear, manufactured from the wool grown on his own farms. In Mr. Thomas's family, no other habit or broad-cloth, but this of his own growth is worn; and many competent judges have pronounced this cloth to be equal in quality to the best that can be made from imported Spanish wools." See Furey's Derbyshire.

This manufacture, which had been introduced into the town and county some time in the eighteenth century, acquired additional celebrity by the ingenious discovery of Messrs. Jedediah Strutt and William Woollatt, who, in the year 1758, produced a machine for making ribbed stockings. This was termed the Derby rib. From an imperfect idea furnished by a common workman named Roper, these ingenious gentlemen brought this important improvement to perfection and obtained a patent, which gave them the exclusive use of it during a term of fourteen years. A kind of ribbed-work had been introduced in the knitting of stockings, even before the invention of the stocking-frame, and it has been asserted that a pair of ribbed stockings had been made by a man named Wright, at Ilkeston, in the year 1730, and by an old stocking-maker of Dale Abbey. The following account of the invention is from William Strutt, esq. “It was Jedediah Strutt, my father, who invented the Derby rib machine in the year 1758, or thereabouts. About that time he settled in Derby for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of ribbed stockings, in conjunction with his brother-in-law Mr. Woollatt, who was then a hosier in that place, and which partnership continued until the death of my father, in the year 1797. A great part of the time during which the patent was in force, Mr. Samuel Need of Nottingham was a partner, under the firm of Need, Strutt and Woollatt. The patent-right was tried twice in Westminster-hall: first, with the hosiers of Derby, and afterwards with those of Nottingham; from which time it was enjoyed quietly to the end of the term.”—This improvement has suggested others, and from it has arisen the art of making open-work mittens and various fanciful articles.

The stocking frame invented by the Rev. William Lea or Lee, of Calverton in 1589 was very simple, with jacks only, and was a twelve-gage: the improvement introduced by Aston of Thoroton, who was originally a miller, consisted in applying the lead-sinkers, which are still in use. Needham, a London framework-knitter, placed the trucks on the solebar, and in 1714 another London workman, named Hardy, added the caster-back and hanging-bits; and thus may be said to have brought the stocking frame to all the perfection of which it is capable, for nothing that has subsequently been devised has added any power or facility to its operations. The Derby-rib-machine, applied to the stocking frame, is known among the frame-work-knitters as the one-and-one, and the two-and-one rib machine; the invention of which, by Mr. Jedediah Strutt, has been already mentioned.

The principle of the stocking frame was applied to the knitting of various articles in the course of the last century. In 1766, a person named Crane manufactured a rich brocade for waistcoats on a similar frame, and about two years afterwards he attempted vandyke-work, by appending a warp-machine to a plain stocking frame. In 1769, Mr. Robert Frost, who, we believe, is still living at Arnold near Nottingham, invented the figured oilet-hole machine, and in concert with Mr. Thomas Frost, now of Worcester, obtained patents for various inventions, which gradually led to the net and lace frames.

The first machine for making lace from a stocking frame was contrived in 1777; and the invention of it was disputed by Mr. Robert Frost, and a poor operative of Nottingham, of the name of Holmes. This was superseded by the point-net machine, the offspring of the ingenuity of Mr. John Lindley, senior; at whose death, Mr. Thomas Taylor, of Chapel-bar, having improved upon the principle, took out a patent. This subsequently was further improved by Mr. Hiram Flint, but it has been almost wholly superseded by the warp and bobbin net. This last was the invention, chiefly, of Mr. James Tarratt, about the year 1783: that ingenious man was very lately resident in the Charter-house, in London. The bobbin and carriage, for making bobbin-nets, is an important invention and has been claimed by various persons, among whom is Mr. John Lindley, resident at Loughborough. The other claimants were George Whitmore of Nottingham, who died greatly distressed in a London hospital, and Robert Brown, also of Nottingham, who some time before his death fell into a state of melancholy, occasioned by his pecuniary embarrassments and the failure of his fishing-net and upright warp machines. The bobbin and carriage machine was first worked, about the year 1799. In 1807, Edward Whittaker of Nottingham made the bobbin and carriage to traverse, after the manner now in use, in the Loughborough and Levers' machines. He died at New Radford, in impoverished circumstances. The rack was applied to the lace machine by Handley of Nottingham, who was unfortunately poisoned with cantharides, administered to him in a frolic. In the succeeding years, the lace manufacture received numerous improvements, which it would be impossible to particularise with accuracy or distinctness in this compendious view of so interesting a subject: it will be sufficient to say, that Mr. William Morley, now of the firm of Boden and Morley, of Derby, introduced the straight-bolt bobbin-net and the circular-bolt bobbin-net machines, both of which are now in use. To the family of the Levers this manufacture is indebted for various improvements, and indeed the more recent inventions have chiefly consisted of ingenious methods of adapting the Levers' bobbin-net machine to a variety of purposes; and in 1826, Mr. William Crofts and Mr. John Bertie applied the Levers' machine to make breadths by what is termed a treble-turn-again, which superseded all other methods. Of the Messrs. Levers, the elder died some years ago at New Radford; his son, Mr. John Levers, resides at Rouen in Normandy; and his nephew, of the same name, lives at Nottingham. The plat-net machine still in use, was the invention of the unfortunate and misguided Jeremiah Brandreth, who was executed for treason at Derby, November 7, 1817.

The lace manufactories of Derbyshire are in number about forty, and they employ eight hundred persons, besides giving employment to between three and four thousand females who figure or run the net when it is taken from the loom. Messrs. Boden and Morley, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Wigston work their machines by steam. In Derby alone there are one hundred and thirty-three lace machines, and the quantity produced is so immense, that the depression of the business seems to be the necessary consequence of over-production. A rack of net, which at the time of the first patentee sold at a guinea, may be now purchased for a shilling or eighteen pence.

Silk, it has been noticed, was used as the principal material in hosiery soon after the invention of the stocking frame, but it was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that the manufacture of that elegant article by machinery upon an extensive scale was introduced into this country. The Italians had previously possessed the art of throwing silk by means of machinery, and the French excelled in the fabric of piece-goods. Attempts were made in England to rival these productions, but without success. A person named Crocket endeavoured to throw silk at Derby in the year 1702; but his machinery was imperfect, and it was not until 1715, that a young ingenious and enterprising mechanic, whose name was Lombe, resolved to proceed to Italy and investigate personally the whole process. He encountered many dangers, but returned to England in 1717, with plans and drawings, and ac-accompanied by two Italian workmen. He came immediately to Derby, and rented of the corporation a long swampy island in the Derwent for eight pounds per annum, and there erected THE SILK MILL, which was long esteemed a masterpiece of mechanical skill. While the mill was building, Mr. Lombe erected temporary machines (turned by hand) in the town hall, and other places, by which he was enabled to pay for the erection of the grand machine, as the work went on. In 1718 he obtained a patent for a term of fourteen years; but the Italians were enraged at his success, and he fell a victim to their vengeance, in the year 1722; it being supposed that a slow poison, administered to him by an artful woman from that country, occasioned his death at the early age of twenty-nine. One of the Italians who had accompanied Mr. Lombe from Italy, and whose name was Gartrevalli, remained at Derby for some time, and afterwards worked at a silk mill which had been established at Stockport, where he died in poverty.

Mr. John Lombe was succeeded by his brother William, a young man of a melancholy disposition, who committed suicide. The property then became the inheritance of Mr. Thomas Lombe, the cousin of the enterprising founder of it, and was conducted with much spirit and success; for about the year 1730, the works are said to have employed more than three hundred persons. In 1732 the patent expired, and the proprietor petitioned parliament for its renewal, alleging "that the works had been so long a time in perfecting, and the people in teaching, that there had been none to acquire emolument from the patent." The application was not successful, but a remunerating grant of £14,000. was voted to him, and a model of the works was ordered to be deposited in the Tower of London. The proprietor was also introduced at court, and had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. He did not long enjoy this reward of wealth and honour. On the 3rd of January, 1739, he expired, leaving to his widow an accumulated property, valued at little less than £120,000. On the 20th of February, 1739, the lease of the silk mill was assigned from Lady Lombe to Richard Wilson, esq. and the whole of the works were in the following July transferred to that gentleman for the sum of £4000. These premises were occupied for many years by Mr. Swift, who made many important additions to the machinery. The lease expired in 1803; and the mill is now in the occupation of Mr. William Taylor; who has entirely renewed the works, with numerous important improvements. In the year 1826, a fire broke out in the upper part of the old mill and did considerable damage.

In this preparatory sketch, we cannot pretend to describe this extraordinary combination of mechanism, except in a very cursory manner. The length of the building is one hundred and ten feet; its breadth thirty-nine feet; and its height fifty-five feet and a half. It contains five stories, besides the under-works, and is lighted by four hundred and sixty-eight windows. The whole of the rooms are filled with machinery constructed on the most modern principle. This elaborate machine (for one only it is) though occupying five apartments, is put in motion by a single water-wheel, twenty-three feet in diameter. All operations are performed here, from winding the raw silk to organizing or preparing it for the weavers.

Besides this original mill at Derby for the throwing of silk, there are twelve others in that town, and in the other parts of the county, at Glossop, Chesterfield, &c. there are five or six. In this branch of the silk trade, between two and three thousand hands are employed, a great proportion of whom are children and young women. The wages differ with respect to age, sex and capacity from 2s. or 3s. per week to about 20s.—The names of the manufacturers, who attend chiefly to throwing silk, will be found by reference to the body of the Directory.

The weaving of piece-goods in silk was first introduced into Derby by Mr. William Taylor, at his factory in Bag-lane, about seven or eight years ago. His example was followed by Messrs. Bridget and Son, and by Messrs. Ambrose Moore and Co. and now sarcenets, gros-de-naples and other rich silks are manufactured, in a style equal to those made by the weavers of Spitalfields. There are now about two hundred and twenty looms in work. The number of hands employed in this branch is about three hundred.

Mr. Isaac Peet, now of the firm of Frost and Peet, introduced the weaving of narrow piece-goods into Derby in the year 1823; Messrs. J. and C. Peet erected a large factory, and fitted it up with looms and machinery, constructed with great ingenuity by Mr. Isaac Peet, which they applied to steam-power for the weaving of silk ferrets, galloons, doubles, &c. and in the manufacture of these goods they are not to be excelled. Messrs. J. and C. Peet are also considerable manufacturers of silk hosiery. The other ribbon weavers are Messrs. Smith, Bosley and Smith at Glossop, and Messrs. Frost and Peet. The latter have recently erected a handsome mill on the banks of the Derwent, and the abilities of Mr. Isaac Peet has been again called forth to furnish it with his excellent and well-constructed looms and machinery. The hands employed in manufacturing ferrets, galloons, &c. amount to upwards of four hundred.

The rapid rise of the cotton manufacture in this country is a subject of astonishment to other nations; and has been justly termed one of the greatest triumphs of enterprise aided by mechanical genius. Long after the middle of the last century, the cotton manufacture was in its infancy; it "now forms the principal support and bulwark of the country, affording an advantageous field for the accumulation and employment of millions upon millions of capital, and of thousands upon thousands of workmen."* The manufacture of cotton was probably introduced into England in the early part of the seventeenth century, but down to the comparatively late period of 1773, the west only was cotton, and the manufacturers were dispersed in cottages throughout the country. They continued to labour under the disadvantage of importing linen-yarn for the warp or longitudinal threads of the fabric, while no additional supplies of cotton-yarn could be procured for weft, but by facilitating the processes of carding and spinning. The desired improvements originated with an illiterate, but most ingenious and inventive mechanic, named James Hargraves, a carpenter at Blackburn in Lancashire. He adapted the stock cards, used in the woollen manufacture, to the carding of cotton. The carding-machine soon succeeded Hargraves' invention; and was brought into use by Mr. Peel, the grandfather of the present eminent statesman, about the year 1762. Sir Richard Arkwright added some improvements to the carding-engine, but spinning by hand still continued to be an operation too tedious to fulfil the expectations of enterprising men, and in 1767, Hargraves constructed a machine called a spinning-jenny, which enabled a spinner to spin eight threads with the same facility that one had previously been spun; and the machine was subsequently brought to such perfection as to enable a little girl to work no fewer than from eighty to one hundred and twenty spindles. Hargraves thus opened the way to those splendid inventions and discoveries that have created and sustained a vast current of public and individual wealth beyond any thing recorded in the history of the world; but to himself, his inventions were productive of bankruptcy and ruin, and, to the indelible disgrace of his age and country, he was suffered to end his days, even after the merit of his inventions had been universally acknowledged, in the workhouse at Nottingham.

Still the jenny was applicable only to the spinning of cotton for weft, being unable to give to the yarn that degree of firmness and hardness which is required in the longitudinal threads or warp. This deficiency was supplied by the invention of the spinning frame, constructed by Sir Richard Arkwright. That extraordinary individual was born at Preston in Lancashire, in 1732. He was the youngest of thirteen children and was bred to the trade of a barber. In very early life he turned his attention to mechanism; but he followed his original trade until he was thirty-five years of age, both at Bolton-le-Moors and at Wirksworth in this county. About that period he became an itinerant hair-dealer, and formed an acquaintance with a clock-maker at Warrington of the name of Kay, to whom he seems to have imparted his ideas, and in conjunction with whom he put together the first machine for spinning by means of rollers. It was some time before this ingenious man could procure the aid of capital. He applied in vain to a Mr. Atherton of Liverpool, but at length the celebrated Jedediah Strutt of Derby, who, by the invention of the Derby rib, was acquiring a fortune in the stocking manufacture, having seen Arkwright's inventions, entered into partnership with him. In 1769, the first mill, upon Arkwright's principle, was erected at Nottingham. This was driven by horses. A patent for spinning by rollers was obtained, and in 1771 a second factory, on a much larger scale, was built at Cromford in this county; the machinery of which was turned by a water-wheel. Additional discoveries and improvements were made, and a fresh patent for the whole was taken out in 1775. The success which attended this invention excited the emulation of the Lancashire manufacturers, and in 1772 they attempted to set the first patent aside, on the ground that Sir Richard Arkwright was not the original inventor. This allegation was unsupported by evidence, and the action at law terminated in a verdict which confirmed the validity of the patent.— In 1781, Sir Richard Arkwright's second patent, obtained in 1775 was attacked, and a verdict was obtained against him, not on the ground of any prior invention, but because he had not given a sufficiently distinct description of the machinery in the specification. On another trial in 1785, a verdict was given in favour of Sir Richard Arkwright; but a third action followed in June of the same year, in which the patent was contested on the ground of a prior invention, as well as that of imperfect specification. In support of the former, a reed-maker, of Bolton, named Highs or Hayes, was, for the first time, brought forward, who asserted that he had invented a machine for spinning by rollers previously to 1768, and that he had employed Kay, the watchmaker at Warrington, to make a model of the machine. Kay was brought forward to prove that he had communicated that model to Arkwright. A verdict was given against the patent, and the court, at the latter end of the same year, refused to grant a new trial. There is, however, great improbability in the story told by Higs and Kay; and it is difficult to suppose that if Higs was in reality the inventor, he would not have come forward on the first trial in 1772, but have remained sixteen years, a passive spectator of such astonishing success, accomplished by means of which he pretended to be the originator. The most intimate friends of Sir Richard Arkwright, and those best acquainted with his character, never entertained the slightest doubt with respect to the originality of the invention.

On the first introduction of the machines, upon Sir Richard Arkwright's principle, the factories containing them were subjected to the reiterated attacks of the labouring classes; and what was still more extraordinary, the manufacturers themselves displayed the greatest animosity towards these inventions, and unanimously refused to purchase the yarn made by them. In 1774, when Messrs. Strutt and Needham had established a manufacture of calicoes, the manufacturers of Lancashire opposed, without success, the encouragement intended by the legislature on these "fabrics made of cotton lately introduced," which the act pronounced to be "a lawful and laudable manufacture."—Yet, notwithstanding an opposition, in which litigation and mob-violence were frequently allied, Sir Richard Arkwright acquired a princely fortune; and on presenting an address to his late Majesty, in the year 1786, when he served the office of sheriff for Derbyshire, the honour of knighthood was conferred upon him. He had never enjoyed good health, and on the third of August, in the year 1792, he closed his truly useful life at Cromford, in the sixtieth year of his age.

The mule-jenny, so called from its being a compound of the jenny and the spinning frame, was invented by Mr. Samuel Crompton of Bolton-le-Moors, in 1775. All sorts of wefts are now spun by this machine. The inventor of this machine perfected it gradually, and took out no patent to secure him a reward for his labour. In 1812, he applied to parliament for a remuneration, and it was shown that upwards of four millions of spindles on his principle were used in buildings and machinery valued at from three to four millions sterling. Parliament voted him the very inadequate sum of £5,000.—In 1792, Mr. William Kelly of Glasgow, discovered a mode of working the mule, which had previously been a hand-machine, by mechanical power.

The power-loom, for the weaving of cotton, was the invention of the Rev. Mr. Cartwright, a clergyman of Kent, who took out a patent for his invention in 1787; and the progress of power-loom weaving was greatly aided by a beautiful machine for dressing the yarn used as warps, which is now called Ratcliffe's dressing machine, but was invented by Mr. Thomas Johnson of Bradbury.—There are now upwards of 50,000 power-loom in Great Britain. At the accession of the late king, in 1760, the entire value of all the cotton goods, manufactured in Great Britain, was estimated to amount to £200,000. a year, and the number of persons employed was quite inconsiderable. But after the invention of the jenny and the spinning frame, the quantity of cotton imported, the value of goods manufactured, and the number of persons employed, increased in a geometrical proportion. The imports from 1771 to 1776, amounted on an average to 4,764,589 lbs. and from that period to the dissolution of Sir Richard Arkwright's second patent in 1785, the annual average imports had increased to 7,470,845 lbs. In 1824, Mr. Huskisson stated to the House of Commons, that the total value of the cotton goods annually manufactured in Great Britain amounted to the prodigious sum of 31½ millions; and we shall certainly not exceed the truth, if we estimate their present value at 40 millions.

We shall not attempt to trace the cotton manufacture of Derbyshire, earlier than the erection of the mill at Cromford, by Sir Richard Arkwright, in 1771. There are now two mills at Cromford and a third at Masson, which was also built by Sir Richard Arkwright. In these are employed about fifteen hundred persons, of which four-fifths are women and children. At Belper are the cotton mills of the Messrs. Strutt. There were formerly three mills upon the Derwent at this place, the first of which was erected by Mr. Jedediah Strutt, in the year 1776. Two of these are now standing, but the third was destroyed by fire in 1803. The principal of these mills is two hundred feet long, thirty feet wide and six stories high. At these mills about fifteen hundred persons are constantly employed. There are also three cotton mills at Millford, belonging to the same proprietors, where about five hundred persons are employed in the manufacture of cotton-thread. The Messrs. Evans employ between five and six hundred persons at Darley Abbey, near Derby. There are in the whole county at present about one hundred and twelve mills for the same manufacture, employing, in the whole, not less than twenty thousand persons.

The parish of Glossop, situated amidst the most mountainous tracks of the High Peak, has become, within little more than forty years, one of the most important seats of manufacture within Derbyshire. Of the hundred and twelve cotton mills existing at present in this county, there are fifty-six in Glossop parish, without reckoning five other similar mills, upon or beyond the boundary brooks. In the hamlets connected with this parish, an immense number of manufactures and rising trades of various descriptions are scattered. Calico-weaving is carried on in eleven of these hamlets, and calico-printing in four. In seven of these places, where in the year 1780 there were only a few hovels and here or there a farmstead, there are now establishments for woollen cloth spinning, weaving and dressing; and throughout these hamlets, there are numerous factories for muslin, cambric, and fustian weaving; for bleaching and dyeing; for hat-making, paper-making and tanning; besides smithies, and iron-works of every description. In the last quarter of the last century there was but one mill in the whole of this district, and that was employed in grinding the scanty crop of oats into meal for the food of a few agricultural inhabitants. —The late Samuel Oldknow, esq. was one of the earliest manufacturing settlers in this vicinity. He found a powerful stream coursing its way through a deep dell, and instantly perceived the advantages to be derived from it. He established himself near Mellor; and his example and success in business soon procured him many neighbours, until the banks of the Goyte and the Etherow became the busy scenes of industrious, enterprising and ingenious men.

The first mill built by Mr. Oldknow was upon the Arkwright principle, and he improved the fineness of the threads. Having accomplished this object in the spinning, he applied it to the weaving of British muslins, and constructed mills for that purpose, which he executed by the power-loom. Mr. Oldknow was ever active in public pursuits, and the Peak-Forest canal originated chiefly with him. Towards the close of his useful existence he occupied himself much in agricultural pursuits, and at his lamented death, which happened in September 1826, he left the valley of Glossop improved in its agricultural produce, as well as enriched by manufacture; and it may be also said, that what he found a desert, he left, comparatively a city and a garden. —The principal manufacturers now resident in that district will be seen by reference to the Directory. Mr. J. Wood, and Messrs. J. and W. Sidebottom are considered as the most eminent power-loom manufacturers; which looms they employ in the fabric of calicoes and muslins. Calico printing is here carried on extensively: it is performed with cylindrical copper rollers, on which the figures are engraved. The process of this mode of printing is so rapid that pieces of twenty-eight yards are thrown off from each set of rollers in less than two minutes. This art was greatly improved, if not invented, by Mr. John Potts, of the house of Potts, Oliver and Potts. This gentleman was an artist himself, and having studied the different shades of colour produced upon the blue-ware in the potteries, he was enabled to bring the art of calico-printing to a perfection of which previously it had not been supposed to be capable.

In a county which is rising so rapidly in manufacturing interest, the business of bleaching and that of dyeing become necessarily important. It appears indeed that Derbyshire was distinguished in very early times for its fullers and bleachers. There are bleaching-houses and grounds in about eighteen towns and villages. We have already mentioned those at Millford and Glossop. One of the most eminent in the county is that of Mr. John Garton, at Lumsdale near Matlock. Grass-bleaching is carried on by Messrs. Hewitt, Longson and Co. at New Brampton, and by Mr. Radford at Higham.

Of the other branches of industry in which the inhabitants of Derbyshire are chiefly employed, we must not omit mention of tape, ferrets and small-wares. Manufactories of this nature were introduced in the town of Derby about a quarter of a century ago, by Riley, Madeley, Hackett and Co. and the manufacture of tape is now carried on by different firms, which have all originated in the Haarlem works, in Derby. There are nine mills in the county, at which about nine hundred persons are employed.

The porcelain or china manufactory of Derby has placed the reputation of this country on a level with that of Saxony or France for the production of this elegant article; and superior to any other, for the finish and taste of the execution. This manufacture was introduced here about the year 1750, by Mr. W. Duesbury, who fabricated numerous elegant and costly articles, among which was an elegant dessert service, consisting of one hundred and twenty pieces, for his present Majesty, when Prince of Wales. The fineness of the material has subsequently been greatly increased, and much superiority in the colouring has been attained. The blue and gold had been brought to the highest degree of beauty, and now the green, in which alone this porcelain was surpassed by foreigners, is possessed of the highest degree of delicacy and lustre. The body of this elegant ware is fine clay, combined with fluxes, and is chiefly brought from Cornwall. The best kind is completely fusible. The biscuit figures are peculiar to this manufacture, and are in high estimation in almost every part of the globe. The urns, vases and ewers produced in this manufactory are from classical designs and are adorned with landscapes, portraits and figures by some very superior artists. Among the splendid services executed at the Derby china works, the following may be enumerated;—one for the Earl of Shrewsbury, embellished with fruit-subjects, upon a rich ground of the chrome-green; another for the Duke of Devonshire, which was enriched with original views of Chatsworth, Hardwick, &c. Elegant services for Lord Muncaster and for Lord Ongley, were richly and tastefully embellished with historical designs. In 1819, a service consisting of numerous bowls and dishes, for the Persian ambassador, was executed in a style of superior splendour: the ground was gold, chased and inscribed with Persian characters.

Red earthenware is made at Alfreton, Church Gresley and at Ticknall. At Swadlingcote, white and yellow-ware is manufactured. Near Chesterfield there are extensive factories for white, brown and red-ware; and in the same neighbourhood large water-pipes for drains are made. At Belper-gutter and Denby, there are two manufactories for stone-ware, bottles, pitchers, &c.

The clock and watch manufactories of Derby employ about sixty persons. Messrs. Whitehurst and Son, who conduct an extensive business in this line, are descendants of the celebrated geologist, natural philosopher and able mechanist, Mr. John Whitehurst, F. R. S. That eminent man settled at Derby about the year 1740, where he made the clock and chimes of All Saints church and the clock of the town hall; on which account the corporation presented to him the freedom of the borough. He was subsequently appointed inspector of weights and measures in London, where he died in February, 1788, in his seventy-fifth year. The present Messrs. Whitehurst have made clocks for many of the halls belonging to the nobility and gentry of this and other counties, which are remarkable for their accuracy. They have also made a clock with chimes for Burton old church, and clocks for many churches in this and other counties which are universally admired. The watches of Mr. Thomas Cooper, Messrs. Brookhouse, Mr. Tunnicliffe, and other manufacturers are highly esteemed, and have become articles of extensive exportation. The clock-brasses made at Ashbourn are in very high repute.

There is a curious and interesting mill for the manufacture of common screws, at Hartshorn, belonging to Messrs. Smith, Port, Wood and Co. It was originally a branch of a similar manufactory at Burton-upon-Trent. Numerous hands are employed, and many hundred gross are made per week, by means of engines and lathes, turned by a water-wheel. These screws are of various sizes, weighing from half an ounce to thirty pounds per gross. Many children are employed, and wages vary according to age and dexterity.

Among the remaining manufactures, which are too numerous to particularize, it will suffice to name the paper-mills, the principal of which are at Darley Abbey, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Little Eaton and Matlock. These employ upwards of three hundred persons. Printing has been carried on in all its branches in Derby, Chesterfield, &c. for many years past; and at Derby, Messrs. Mozley and Son, have long been established as Wholesale Printers, and at the present time employ sixty-seven hands. There are also colour-mills, plaster of Paris mills, and mills for Roman cement. Hat-making is carried on at Lea-wood, at which place the government has, during many years, contracted for soldiers' military caps, helmets, &c. Mr. Walker, is the proprietor of this establishment. Fine hats are also made at the same manufactory. Hat-making is also an extensive business at Chesterfield, Matlock, Wirksworth, Alfreton, &c.—Tanners, fellmongers and leather-dressers are established in the principal towns.—Messrs. Cocker and Sons, at Hathersage, are celebrated as needle-makers.

Thus it will be seen that Derbyshire is entitled to take an elevated rank in the trade, wealth and industry of the kingdom. Some writers have placed it as the fourth amongst the counties of England with respect to manufactures; and we may venture to assert, that its character is rising in national estimation. In agriculture it is upon an equality at least with the most favoured districts; and its cheeses in particular are sought for in other counties. The chief articles exported for sale beyond the limits of the county, appear to be cotton-twist and stockings, silk-thread and stockings, calicoes and muslins, frame-lace, hats: coals, iron, edge-tools and implements, nails, lead, red and white lead, building-stone and marble, lime, gypsum, calamine, chert, fluor spar, copperas, grind and mill-stones, fire-clay, bricks, stones; and, among other articles of agricultural produce, wool and cheese.—In aid of its transit trade or commerce, Derbyshire possesses the Trent, and the Trent and Mersey navigation; the Peak Forest, Cromford, Erewash, Chesterfield and Derby canals. There is now in progress the High Peak railway, which will extend from Cromford to Whaley Bridge on the Goyte, where it will meet the Peak Forest canal.—The import trade of the county may be considered as consisting chiefly of the raw material for its cotton and silk factories, of groceries and wines, and of other articles of foreign growth, with a few manufactured goods of the peculiar produce of other counties.

ROAD SKETCH, No 1.

JOURNEY from CAVENDISH BRIDGE to HANGING BRIDGE.

Note. The Inns named in the following Road Sketches are only such as keep post horses. The hand points to the market towns, to the right and left of the road where the cross roads occur. R. and L. also means right and left of the road.— The letter m. following the figures is an abbreviation for miles. The market-towns are printed in Roman capitals.

Here the present Earl of Harrington has built a noble gothic mansion, and furnished it with a good collection of paintings and ancient armour, some superb furniture, and an excellent library of books.
Alvaston	½	4½		R. Alvaston Hall. L. Osmaston Hall.
Cross the Canal DERBY , 126 m. from London	3	7½		Derby , the capital of the county, is situated upon the banks of the Derwent upon ground of different heights, and is surrounded with gentle and pleasant eminences, from which flow the Markeaton and other brooks. Over the Derwent there is a handsome stone bridge, built on the model of the bridge at Versailles. There are numerous bridges over the Markeaton brook, within the limits of the borough, and the course of the Derwent is diversified by weirs and islands so as to render it extremely picturesque. Among the public buildings we may mention the Town Hall (now erecting) which will be an elegant fabric of the Ionic order, designed by Matthew Habershon, esq. The New County Hall, by the same artist, is a commodious and well-constructed building. The county jail, situated on the south-west of the town covers, with its buildings and courts, nearly four acres of land, and is surrounded with a high, massy wall. Its Doric portico is one of the finest specimens of that order of architecture in England, and is greatly admired for its classical plainness and solidity. The whole was designed by George Goodwin, esq. and has been completed about two years. The Old County Jail, which is now converted into the Borough Jail, was erected in 1756, and is a very respectable building, with a bold strong front.— The Infirmary, which stands at the entrance of the town from the London road, is a handsome square building, with interior arrangements admirably adapted for the comfort and convenience of the unfortunate inmates. The great mechanical talent of William Strutt, esq. has contributed to the improvement of this benevolent institution. The late Mr. Charles Sylvester was the practical agent, and the combined efforts of those intelligent men have produced a very superior system of management and economy in the Derby Infirmary. The New Assembly Room is of stone, and stands on the north-east side of the market-place; the pediment is handsomely enriched with a bass-relief of musical instruments.— The Theatre is not very creditable to the dramatic taste of the town; its exterior is very humble, although within the building is neat and commodious.— There are six churches, some of which are of great antiquity. The tower of All Saints is considered a fine and rich specimen of the lighter style of gothic architecture, and is celebrated for the chasteness of its proportions and the elegance of its tracery. The height of the tower is upwards of 170 feet, and there is a tradition that it was erected at the expense of the young unmarried inhabitants of the town, as the words "young men and maidens" remain perfectly legible on the northern side. The body of the church was built in the year 1725, after a design by the celebrated

Gibbs, and is a beautiful piece of Doric architecture, but certainly not in unison with the fine gothic tower. The interior is elegant and spacious, and is so particularly calculated for musical performances, that at the period of the triennial festival, Mr. Grestorex and other eminent professors have declared it to be the best musical chamber in England. The east end is separated from the part of the church appropriated to divine service by a rich open-work of iron, and contains the vestry, the chancel, and the monument room of the House of Cavendish: in this is the splendid mural monument of the Countess of Shrewsbury.—St. John's Church is a very recent erection. It is in the embellished style of pointed gothic, with elegant minarets and turrets, and was designed by G. Goodwin, esq. Derby was distinguished in ancient times for its religious houses. A monastery, dedicated to St. Helen, stood near the upper part of Bridge-Gate. On the north-west side of Nun's Green, anciently called King's Mead, was a small nunnery of Benedictines, dedicated to St. Mary-de-Pratis." The priory of Dominicans or Black Friars, stood on the south side of that spacious entrance into the town called Friar-Gate. A cell of Cluniac Monks, dedicated to St. James, was situated near the brook on the north of St. James's lane.—One of the most considerable charities in the town is the Devonshire Alms House, in Full-Street, founded by the Countess of Shrewsbury, in the reign of Elizabeth. Another Alms House, for the widows of clergymen, was endowed by Edward Large, of Derby, in the year 1716.—There is also a free grammar school; and recently several Sunday schools have been instituted, besides schools upon the plan of Lancaster and Bell. Within a few years a Mechanic's Institution has been founded, under the care of Messrs. W. and J. Strutt, which is rising in utility.—The Philosophical Society possess an elegant library with mathematical and philosophical apparatus, and a fine collection of fossils. The Permanent Library is a useful establishment, affording many advantages to the reading-classes of society in the town.—Respecting the famous Silk Mill, and the silk trade now extensively carried on in all its departments, as well as the cotton, the hosiery, the iron-works, &c. we refer the reader to the Introductory part of this Directory. The markets are held on Wednesday, Friday (principal) and Saturday, and a cattle market every Tuesday fortnight. The borough contains 4,800 houses, and about 22,500 inhabitants.

Ashbourn. The situation of this town is remarkably beautiful; it stands in a rich valley, through which the river Dove rolls its pellucid waters, and when seen from the Derby road, appears as if embosomed by hills, and conveys a pleasing idea of retirement and social happiness. The church is a cruciform structure, with a square tower in the centre, surmounted by a lofty and richly ornamented octagonal spire; it is supposed to have been built about the middle of the 13th century, and contains several handsome monuments well worthy of inspection. Here is also a good free grammar-school, that was founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, besides other charitable institutions. The inhabitants derive their chief support from agriculture and the manufacture of cotton, beside which, they have the benefit of a market on Saturday, and numerous fairs. This town contains 470 houses, and about 2,500 inhabitants.

Ashbourn Hall, the seat of Sir William Boothby, bart. was from remote antiquity the seat of the Cokaine's, one of the most eminent Derbyshire families. The mansion does not possess much external architectural beauty, but within every part is disposed with taste and elegance. Many of the paintings are valuable. The library contains a choice collection of classic and polite literature. The situation is low, but the park and gardens have been laid out with great taste and elegance.

R. Okeover Hall, Ilam Hall. L. Snelston Hall.
Dove Dale. The vale through which the Dove winds its course is a romantic glen. On the right, or Derbyshire border, the rocks are more bare of vegetation than on the left, or Staffordshire side, where they are partially covered with a fine hanging wood, which from its various combinations with the surrounding objects, presents a succession of beautiful and romantic views, diversified by the varying forms of the rocks, and the inconstant current of the Dove, the motion and appearance of which is perpetually changing. The rugged, dissimilar, and frequently grotesque and fanciful appearance of the rocks, distinguishes the scenery of this valley from, perhaps, every other in the kingdom.

This seat occupies a pleasant and very eligible situation, and is the property of Sir Francis Burdett, bart. into whose family it passed, by marriage with the Fraunceys, about the year 1607. The present mansion stands on the site of a more ancient structure: it is an elegant stone building, having a double flight of steps on its north and south fronts; the only difference between which is, that the former is decorated with a handsome portico: the interior consists of a spacious hall, running through the building, having on its sides various noble apartments, and a fine wide oak staircase, that leads to the bed-rooms, &c. The grounds are characterised by a fine undulating surface; they contain a number of plantations and majestic oaks, besides which, here are some spacious lawns, studded with noble timber, from whence the prospects are extremely delightful, including a fine view of the silver winding Trent.

Little Eaton - -	2½ 12½	Bretby Park is the residence of the Earl of Chesterfield. The mansion, a noble modern gothic structure, embattled, and surrounding a spacious quadrangular court, is situated on a fine elevation in the centre of a deer park, enriched with fine groves of chestnut, beech and other timber, and a variety of beautiful scenery unequalled for its extent. The portion of the house which is finished is most elegantly and tastefully fitted up, and splendidly furnished. Here once stood an ancient castle, and more recently a magnificent old mansion, which the late Earl pulled down in his youth through the persuasion of an artful steward. This structure was furnished with rich tapestry and fine paintings, and was surrounded with gardens, disposed after the plan of Versailles, in the old grand style, with terraces, statues, and fountains. Its demolition was afterwards sincerely regretted by the late Earl, who laid the foundation of the present fabric. In the civil wars, the old hall was garrisoned for the king, and Sir John Gell took it by storm and drove the loyalists from it.

CHESTERFIELD, 150 m. from London	5	35	Chesterfield, a borough and market-town of considerable antiquity, is particularly distinguished in our national annals as the scene of a severe battle, which was fought in the reign of Henry IIIrd. between the forces of Henry, the king's nephew, and those of Robert de Ferrers, last Earl of Derby, in which the former were victorious. Here likewise a severe conflict took place in the civil wars, when the Parliamentary troops were defeated by the Earl of Newcastle. The town is large and of considerable trading importance, but irregularly built, and situate on a rising ground on the west side of the river Rother. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, built in the form of a cross; it contains some noble monuments for the Foljambe family, and it is by no means destitute of architectural beauty, but is more particularly remarkable for the curious construction of its spire, which is 230 feet high: it is built of oak and covered with lead, the volutes running spirally round the spire, present to the eye at the same time a projecting and an hollow side, which gives it a leaning appearance in whatever direction it is approached. The town is lighted with gas; has commodious baths, a neat town hall, a free grammar school, and several charitable institutions. It has a well supplied market on Saturday, but the inhabitants derive their chief support from the manufacture of cotton, lace, stockings, earthenware, and from the bleaching grounds, iron founderies, and other works in the neighbourhood. The borough contains 5,500 inhabitants. The Chesterfield canal, communicating with the Trent and the Humber, was completed in 1777, at an expense of £160,000. Whittington is celebrated as being the meeting place of the Revolutionists in 1688. Dronfield is a small neat market-town, pleasantly situated in a valley, and remarkable for its salubrity, which has occasioned it to be made the place of residence of many respectable families. The church is a handsome building, having a tower at the west end terminated by a spire; and but few parochial churches possess a finer chancel. In the latter are some curious monumental brasses, and some stone stalls worthy of notice. Henry Fanshawe, esq. Remembrancer of the Exchequer, founded an excellent free school at this place, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. The market, now discontinued, was formerly held on Thursday. The town contains 267 houses and 1,800 inhabitants, who are chiefly supported by agriculture. R. Norton Hall, The Oaks, Meerbrook Hall.

DERBY, 126 m. from London			Derby. See description of, in Road Sketch No. 1. At Quarndon there is a strong chalybeate spring, much frequented during the summer months, celebrated in former times for curing the leprosy. Kedleston Hall, the very magnificent seat of Lord Scarsdale, is of modern erection, comprising a centre, and two pavilions, connected by corridors of the Doric order with the main building. The principal front, facing the north, has a double flight of steps in the centre; it stands on a gentle elevation, is 360 feet in extent, and has a uniform allusion to classic models. The grand hall is Grecian, and the ceiling is supported by 20 columns of alabaster; the saloon is reckoned one of the most beautiful apartments of its kind in Europe. The collection of paintings belonging to this truly splendid seat, is not only very extensive, but comprises many valuable works by the most eminent masters. The park lodge, designed from the arch of Octavia, gives admission to the grounds, that are about five miles in circumference, and display some very flourishing plantations, besides a grove of venerable oaks, many of which are of enormous magnitude. Within the park there is a celebrated mineral spring. The house may be seen from eleven to two o'clock every day, Sundays excepted. Wirksworth is a town of considerable antiquity, situate near the southern extremity of the mining district, in a low valley, almost surrounded by hills. Here the features of the country begin to assume a more bold and prominent appearance. The church is a gothic building, apparently of the 14th century, and contains several curious monuments. About a mile South of the town the Cromford and High Peak rail-way forms a junction with the canal, and runs 33 miles NW. to Whaley bridge, where it joins the Peak Forest canal. The interior is furnished in a very elegant manner; it is decorated with a few good paintings, among which is a sublime view of Ulawater lake, by Wright, which is considered one of his best productions: and also a full-length portrait of the meritorious founder of the family, by the same artist. The grounds possess a very romantic character, exhibiting a variety of rock scenery intermingled with wood; the late and present owners are said to have planted upwards of 50,000 trees annually for more than seven years upon these elevated grounds. The gardens are large and laid out with taste. The public are admitted three days in each week.

Hence Haddon Hall became the possession of the Rutland family. The chapel is enriched with painted windows, one of which bears the date of 1427 in stained glass. Here is a Roman altar, which is preserved with great attention, but the inscription on it has rather given occasion to learned disputes than been satisfactorily explained.

Great improvements have been made in this town by the noble Duke, and a capacious bath has been established, under the superintendence of Mr. White Watson, F. L. S. The church is very ancient, and is built in the form of a cross, and at the west end there is an ornamented Saxon arch, apparently of a much older date than the edifice itself. Within the church is a stone font of great antiquity. On the east side of the church stands an ancient stone cross, which is conjectured to be about eight hundred years old. The ornaments and the various devices sculptured on the four sides of this relique are much worn and defaced. There are some very fine old monuments in the church. Bakewell was more important in ancient times than at present; it was distinguished by Edward the Elder, who surrounded it with fortifications. The market is held on Friday. The trade and manufacture of the town is not considerable, and chiefly consists in cotton and lead. The town contains 360 houses and 2,000 inhabitants.

The chancel contains the monuments of Bishop Partridge, and Sampson Meverills, a celebrated warrior in the time of Henry VI. There is the ruin of a chapel or oratory much older than the church, on the road towards Middleton. At Rowsley Bridge there is a road that leads to Chatsworth. Chatsworth, the superb mansion of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, has been reckoned one of the wonders of the Peak. It is situate in a spacious valley, near the foot of a lofty mountain, covered with wood, on the highest part of which is the hunting-tower. The present magnificent building was erected on the site of a more ancient structure, by the first Duke of Devonshire. The architect was William Talman, comptroller of the works to William III. It is composed of four nearly equal sides, with an open quadrangular court within. The whole has recently been much enlarged and improved, under the direction of Sir Jeffrey Wyattville, architect to his Majesty. In Chatsworth park many delightful views occur, which are chiefly terminated by the moorland scenery of Derbyshire.—The interior of the quadrangular court is richly ornamented. Two sides of this court have open balconies, with stone ballustrades and busts, representing the most distinguished persons in the reign of Queen Anne. There are also military trophies executed from the designs of G. Gibbon, the celebrated carver in wood, by Mr. Samuel Watson, a native of the Peak, who attained uncommon excellence in sculpturing ornaments in bas-relief. The middle of the court is occupied with the statue of Arion, seated on the back of a dolphin. The flight of steps which connects the hall with the grand stair-case passes between rocks of alabaster. The paintings are numerous and by the first masters. Among the sculptures are the busts of the late C. J. Fox, and the Duke of Devonshire by Nollekens; and also an elegant whole-length figure of Mary Queen of Scots, by Westmacott. Chatsworth also abounds with exquisite carving in wood, the work of the famous G. Gibbon. The ancient mansion was for some time the residence, or rather the prison of Mary Queen of Scots, in remembrance of which a suite of apartments are still called by her name; and near the bridge, by the side of the Derwent, there are the remains of an old building called the Bower of Mary Queen of Scots.—The celebrated philosopher Hobbes resided at Chatsworth under the patronage of the Cavendish family, and died at Hardwick at the age of 92; in the year 1670. The park is nearly eleven miles in circumference.

BUXTON, 16¼ m. from London - - -	1½	38	Buxton . This place has been celebrated from the earliest period for its hot baths; and there is reason to believe that the Romans, who were always attached to bathing, made it a place of resort. Whatever may be the real effects of the mineral waters, the place has risen in public estimation. It is surrounded by hills, and the neighbourhood is not inviting; yet such is the prevalence of fashionable taste, that this town has become, and will probably continue, a spot frequented by fashion and rank during some of the summer and autumnal months. The Crescent was erected by the late Duke of Devonshire, from the designs of Mr. Carr. In completing the Crescent, with the stables, the Duke expended not less than £120,000. In this elegant pile of buildings, are the Centre, the Great Hotel, and St. Anne's Hotel; besides various elegant lodging houses, a theatre, an assembly-room and a news room. The baths are six in number, one for ladies, another for gentlemen, and three private ones for persons of distinction, besides a cold bath. There is also a bath for the poor, who meet with great attention and aid, to which the charitable contributions of the respectable visitors are rendered subservient. The temperature of the water, as it rises at the baths, is about 82 degrees of Fahrenheit. At St. Anne's well, where it is drunk, it is somewhat cooler; there both hot and cold water are obtained from springs scarcely twelve inches asunder. Buxton church is a neat and chaste specimen of doric architecture. This town contains 190 houses and 1,100 inhab. Rather more than half a mile from this small village there is a dell that displays the most romantic scenery imaginable, and leads to an extensive range of cotton works, called Pleasley Forge, which are situate on the rivulet that divides the counties of Nottingham and Derby; though this enchanting spot has not been generally noticed, yet it exhibits all the picturesque beauty and sublime effect of Dove Dale and Matlock, and cannot fail to receive the admiration of the traveller. Hardwick Hall , a noble seat of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire. This far-famed and very interesting mansion stands on a bold eminence in a fine deer park, well stocked with majestic timber; it is of stone, with a lofty tower at each corner, and a spacious court in front, surrounded by a high wall. The building was erected in the latter part of the 16th century, and forms an excellent specimen of those houses which have so frequently been termed Elizabethan; the apartments are lofty and of vast size, but defective in point of elegance of proportions; many of them are hung with arras, and the majority of the chimneys are sufficiently capacious for a hall or kitchen; the great gallery, chiefly remarkable for its extent, ranges along the whole of the east front, and is 195 feet long. In this mansion the beautiful Mary Queen of Scots passed several years of her captivity, and many of the apartments derive great interest from the furniture and other articles preserved in remembrance of that injured princess; those occupied by her are situate on the second floor, and remain almost exactly as she left them; and the bed and chairs in one of the rooms were embroidered by her own fair but ill-fated hand. This venerable seat is enriched with a valuable collection of paintings, one of which is a portrait of the above queen, taken in the tenth year of her imprisonment; she is attired in black, her cheek is faded, her lips are thin, her eyes hollow, and the picture appears to represent the spectre of herself, the shadow of beauty! Bolsover is a small decayed market-town, situate on the brow of a steep hill overlooking a great extent of country, and contains 240 houses and 1,300 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in agriculture. In the church is a noble monument to the memory of Sir Charles Cavendish, with a long and remarkable inscription, expressive of his virtues: several persons of this noble family are buried here. This town, at the period of the Norman Survey, belonged to William FEVEREL, who is supposed to have built a castle near the spot, now occupied by the present mansion, which was erected about the year 1613 by Sir Charles Cavendish, and is a square, lofty and embattled fabric of brown stone, having a tower at each angle, that at the north-east being much higher and larger than the others. A flight of steps, on the east side, leads through a passage to the hall (the roof of which is supported on stone pillars) and thence, to the only room designed for habitation on this floor; this apartment has an arched ceiling, sustained by a pillar in the centre, round which is a plain circular dining-table. Most of the upper rooms are small and not numerous, the stairs and ceilings are of stone, and the floors of plaster. William, first Duke of Newcastle, son and successor to Sir Charles, was a very distinguished supporter of the royal cause, and is said to have suffered a greater deprivation of fortune, in its defence, than any other person, his losses being computed at nearly £950,000. This nobleman gave a superb entertainment in this mansion to Charles the First and his queen, in the year 1633. All the neighbouring gentry were invited to partake in the festival, which was conducted in such a magnificent style that the expenses amounted to nearly £15,000. The scenery and speeches were devised by Ben Jonson. On this occasion the Duke relinquished his seat at Welbeck, to the sovereign and his court, and resided himself at Bolsover.

The Duchess, in her Life of the Duke, observes, that, "When Charles the First went into Scotland to be crowned, he took his way through Nottinghamshire, and lying at Worksop manor, two miles distant from Welbeck, the Marquess invited his majesty thither to dinner, which the king accepted. This entertainment cost between 4 and £5,000, and his majesty liked it so well, that he sent my lord word that the queen was resolved to make a progress into the northern parts, desiring him to prepare the like entertainment, which he did with all possible care and industry, sparing nothing which might add splendour to the feast, which both their majesties were to honour with their presence."—It is probable that this splendid entertainment was held in the magnificent building to the west of the old fabric, erected by the Duke, which is now in ruins. The dimensions of the gallery was 220 feet in length and 28 feet wide. In the front of this building was a fine terrace, from which a flight of steps led to the entrance. At the south end of the garden is a very curious decayed fountain, standing in an octagon reservoir, six feet deep, and ornamented with satyrs, masks, birds and other figures. On the pedestal is a figure of Venus in alabaster, represented holding wet drapery, and in the action of stepping out of a bath. Bolsover castle was an important station during the civil wars.

Sutton Hall, about four miles north of Hardwick, has been the seat of several affluent and distinguished families. In the time of Henry III. it belonged to the family of Harestone, whose heir general married to a Grey, of a younger branch of the Lords Grey of Codnor Castle. The heir general of Grey carried it, in marriage, to the Leaks, one of whom was created, by Charles I. Baron D'Einacourt, and Earl of Soarsdale. After the death of the last Earl of Soarsdale, it was sold to several land-jobbers, who re-sold it to Godfrey Clarke, esq. of Chilcote: it afterwards passed under the will of Godfrey Bag-nall Clarke, esq. to Thomas Kinnerley, esq. Anne, daughter and sole heiress of Joseph Pryce Clarke, esq. married Walter, Earl of Ormond, and brought the estate to that family. The present Marquess has sold this and his other Derbyshire estates within these few years. Sutton Hall and estate was purchased by Richard Arkwright, esq. for £217,000. The mansion house is a noble building, situate on a fine elevation, overlooking a large deer-park, and commanding extensive views over the surrounding country.

Cotton Mills.

Stoney Middleton. This village is romantically situated at the entrance of Middleton Dale. The cottages are scattered amongst the rocks in a very picturesque manner, one rising above another from the base to the summit of the mountain. The church is a modern octagon structure and exhibits nothing particularly worthy of notice. Two neat stone buildings occupy the site of a very ancient bath, supposed to have been originally established by the Romans when they occupied a station at Brough. These baths have been fitted up in a very handsome manner by the present worthy proprietor, Thomas Denman, esq. common serjeant of London, who liberally permits them to be open for the accommodation of the public. The rock scenery in Middleton Dale is of a bold and striking character. The inhabitants in this village are about 700, whose chief support is derived from the lead mines, agriculture and lime burning.

Passing through Middleton, a high perpendicular rock, called the Lover's Leap, marks the first grand opening into the Dale. From the summit of this fearful precipice, about the year 1760, a love-stricken damsel of the name of Baddeley threw herself into the chasm below; and, incredible as it may appear, she sustained but little injury from the desperate attempt: her face was a little disfigured, and her body bruised, by the brambles and the rocky projections that interrupted her fall; but she was enabled to walk to her home with very little assistance. Her bounet, cap and handkerchief were left on the summit of the rock, and some fragments of her torn garments, that waved in the few bushes through which she had passed, marked the course of her descent: she therefore returned to her dwelling shorn of part of her habiliments. Her marvellous escape made a serious impression on her mind, and gave a new turn to her feelings: her fit of love subsided; and she ever afterwards lived, in a very exemplary manner, in the vicinity of the place which had been the scene of her folly; and she died unmarried.

The crags which form one side of Middleton Dale are boldly featured, and the parts are broad and massy. Half way from their base they are much broken, and present many smaller projections and recesses; then commences a lofty range of perpendicular rock, the different strata of which are defined by lines running horizontally athwart its sides. The regular tower and turret-like forms which the stony heights in this dale assume, have, in many places, so much the effect of an old castellated building, that, viewed from the road below, the eye sometimes doubts whether it contemplates the works of nature or of art.

Stoke Hall is indisputably one of the most delightful residences in the north of Derbyshire; and though not sufficiently capacious for the purposes of magnificence and splendour, it might be selected as a fit and happy home for the comforts and elegances of life. Its architecture is neat and simple—neither poor for want of ornament, nor gaudy with profusion; and it stands on a grassful eminence near the brink of the river Derwent, embosomed in some of the most charming wood-scenery in Derbyshire. The river, as it passes the grounds of Stoke, is a noble stream; black with shadow, it moves majestically along. This beautiful place is the property of the Hon. Bridgeman Simpson, and is at present occupied by Robert Arkwright, esq.

Tidswell, see description of, Road Sketch, No. 3.

Eldon Hole, another of the Peak wonders, lies about 3 miles SE of Castleton

L. Ebbing and Flowing well, one of the seven wonders of the Peak.

Railway to Peak Forest canal.

Chapel-en-le-Frith, see description of, Road Sketch, No. 3.

L. Bank Hall.

Five miles to the right of Chapel-en-le-Frith is Castleton, situated in a beautiful valley. This village is celebrated for its mines, cavern, castle and rock scenery.

Hilton	- -	2	7½	Sudbury Hall , the seat of Lord Vernon, is a well-proportioned brick structure, with two wings; it contains several elegantly decorated apartments, and a large gallery that runs through the house, all of which are adorned with good paintings. In the garden, at a short distance from the mansion, stands the church, an ancient fabric that forms a fine picturesque object from being luxuriantly mantled with ivy: it contains a number of monuments of the Vernon family, whose remains have regularly been deposited here for the last two centuries.
Foston	- -	3½	11½	Doveridge Hall . Among the many beauties of this county, whether of nature or of art, few exceed those of the mansion and estate bearing this name, about three miles from Sudbury; which has long been the family mansion of a younger branch of the Cavendish family, placed on an eminence on the banks of the river Dove, and abounding in fine timber with the grounds most tastefully planned, it is an object of constant admiration to every visitor of this romantic neighbourhood. This house is of great extent, and combines grandeur with convenience.
